May 2022 Newsletter

This month

We have been learning about insects, specifically butterflies and bees, and how they play a part in pollinating flowers. They are important to the environment, so we've been discussing why their initial reaction to seeing a bee shouldn't be to squish them right away. We will be showing them pictures of bees, wasps, and hornets to help them differentiate them.

We are also talking about different plants and how they grow (above or below ground) and which parts of certain plants we can eat.

If you need to reach out to us at any time, please feel free to call the school at 309-699-6843 or email me at pmooney@twhsp.org

Something to Try at Home

- Walk around the house and see how many different types of flowers they can find and see if they can name them.
- If you have any available seeds or plants that can be planted in the ground, plant them with the child and explain to them how it will grow. See whether it will be a root or something that sprouts out of the ground.

Health or Nutrition News

We will be having a beekeeper bring in raw honey from her own hives to have the kids taste. If you would like, you can have your child taste regular honey at home that you would buy from a grocery store to allow them to have an idea of what it might taste like.
